Over the last two years 2,997 patients were examined. Of these, 236 had chronic bronchitis, 142 had exacerbation of chronic obstructive bronchitis, and 278 had nonbacterial pneumonia. Cultures of sputum samples revealed the presence of microorganisms in 36.6% of the patients with chronic bronchitis and in 29.5% of those with exacerbation of chronic obstructive bronchitis. Microbial flora in 25.1% of the patients with chronic bronchitis revealed sensitivity to antibiotics. The patients with chronic obstructive bronchitis and nonbacterial pneumonia revealed sensitivity to antibiotics in 14.6 and 11.8%, respectively. Evaluation of the results demonstrated that the diagnostic importance of sputum cultures in detecting bronchopulmonary pathology is its high sensitivity. L e t y (d) = - 2 6 * d * * 2 + 3 * d - 8 1 .
